Societies must not function only on commercial and economic considerations because market failures are common and detrimental to social welfare. There are countless examples of this.

Lack of access means isolation and isolation is a key characteristic of poverty. It means being cut off from supplies, services, facilities, even ideas. I wish to reiterate that a new perspective based on entitlement in other words a right needs to be adopted. Poor people have waited long enough and can no longer suffer technocratic approaches.

Adopting the national model requires political support and legitimacy. It may require making hard decisions, but future generations will thank the decision-makers of today for saving their mother earth.
- Consult your professor.
